8 - What are the best aspects of this course?

Response Rate 10/15 (66.67%)

- Subject material is interesting and relevant, Dr. Allais is an interesting and engaging lecturer
- The course was incredibly well-designed and organized. We got through all of the planned content, and it was all scheduled in a logical order. I can easily think back to each unit, remember the papers we discussed, and produce an account of the contemporary debates around each emotion covered; this has been aided by the weekly short writing assignments in class. Class discussion is always encouraged and taken up. It's the best class I've taken at Hopkins so far.
- Diverse set of readings branching multiple topics
- Student discussions
- This was a really interesting class
- I think the topic itself is hugely fascinating. The teaching helped to break down and discuss hard, complicated, and abstract portions of every reading and make what we were learning really clear. I really loved the readings themselves - such a range, and a lot of different perspectives from all over!
- clear and engaging lectures with room for discussion
- The professors lectures were extremely engaging and enjoyable. Even when I felt confused by the readings, I felt like she was able to break things down into a way I could understand them.
- I thought the material was incredibly interesting and definitely opened my eyes
- Fearghus is a better instructor than a significant portion of philosophy professors I've had. And Lucy Allais is the best philosophy professor I've had to date.

9 - What are the worst aspects of this course?

Response Rate 8/15 (53.33%)

- The length of the course makes it hard to pay attention sometimes, and it is rather lecture heavy
- I can't think of any.
- Some of the readings are 40+ pages and are undigestible if you don't come with a hefty philosophical background.
- None
- Sometimes the workload felt really heavy. That happened in the weeks where I didn't look ahead and see there were more than two readings, or on the syllabus it would look like two readings, but one of the readings would include multiple chapters from a book. I'm a pretty slow reader with philosophy, so having three or four dense, long readings on those weeks was a bit of a struggle.
- earlier in the semester I felt the classes were too lecture focused
- There is a lot of dense reading but that is par for the course for a philosophy class.
- Time met was a little late for my brain to participate in philosophical debates

10 - What would most improve this class?

Response Rate 7/15 (46.67%)

- Making it more of a seminar course
- Given the subjective nature of the content, it might be interesting to add more of a focus on applying the concepts regarding emotions to our own lives. However, this really isn't necessary and would take time away from the content itself.
- Make all the readings accessible on Canvas at the beginning of the semester
- Nothing that I could think of. It is great as it is now.
- N/a
- slightly less lecture and more group discussion of central points
- N/A

11 - What should prospective students know about this course before enrolling? (You may comment on any aspect of this course such as assumed background, readings, grading systems, and so on.)

Response Rate 6/15 (40%)

- Little background is assumed, the readings are very well chosen, and there are many opportunities throughout the semester to show skill and commitment to the class.
- The lectures are engaging, and the grading generous. Definitely worth taking
- Be prepared to think about what you are reading and how you can tie it into the other material. Don't be afraid to formulate your own thoughts on a subject even if they deviate from the mainstream opinions.
- Really interesting class! More niche or "high level" topics of philosophy are discussed. At times I felt a bit lost in discussion because of jargon I didn't understand or concepts I was unfamiliar with (especially with Strawson's freedom and whatnot), so having a solid philosophical background is extremely helpful. I'm a minor, and I still struggled! I don't think this course could be taken without some philosophy knowledge.
- You should probably have taken a philosophy course beforehand.
- Please make use of the TA. Fearghus was incredibly helpful and did not look to discredit your ideas or arguments. He instead wanted to make sure your argument made sense so did everything in his power to help you.
